Scope of Work

SyNet was contracted to handle the voice and data infrastructure, along with the rough installation of the audio visual cabling. This project's uniqueness originated in the design phase; it included a full glass curtain wall, which split the building in half allowing occupants to observe the activities taking place on other levels. SyNet had limited pathway options; and in order to maintain the architectural integrity SyNet had to adapt their services for this creative environment.

About the Client

Perry and Marty Granoff Center for the Creative Arts is a revolutionary building dedicated to encouraging faculty and students to create bold new directions for research, teaching, and production across the boundaries of individual arts disciplines -- among artists, scientists, and scholars.
